Breaking In New Sport, Dutch Sweat Small Stuff

By JOHN TAGLIABUE

AMSTERDAM — People of this free-spirited Dutch city, known for its legal prostitution and easy marijuana, have found another pastime that flirts with convention and the law: picking locks.

On a recent Wednesday evening, Jos Weyers sat hunched over a magnifying glass studying the contours of a key that was taking shape as he filed away at it. Across the table, Jos Meyer sat picking at a standard front-door lock with a set of tools that looked for all the world like a collection of slender dental instruments, painted black.

Mr. Weyers, 39, is among 100 or so members of a club in the Netherlands called Tool, for The Open Organization of Lockpickers, that is dedicated to picking locks for fun. The movement has been growing over the last five

The Xinjiang People's Ministry said the weapons, ammunitions and radioactive materials within Xinjiang had been banned from Sept. 1.

The ministry did not say when, but the dates coincide with the anniversary of Communist China on Oct. 1 and a period afterward, when it began a nationwide clampdown aimed at preventing anniversary pass

The police are investigating reported needle attacks in the regional capital of Urumqi, which apparently began Aug. 15 and continued this month. No arrests have been made.
